The Awards aimed to honor impactful initiatives, creative outreach, and sustained efforts that strengthen scientific understanding and community empowerment.

Award Categories

The Awards were announced under four categories:

1. Popularization of Science – Recognizing exemplary efforts in bridging the gap between science and society through innovative communication, outreach, and engagement.
2. Women’s Health Awareness – Intended to honor contributions toward raising awareness on women’s health issues such as PCOS and thyroid disorders.
3. Promotion of Science Tourism – Celebrating initiatives that integrate science education with heritage conservation to transform scientific landmarks into experiential learning spaces.
4. Public Health Advocacy – Acknowledging leadership in educating communities about zoonotic diseases and the One Health approach.

Application & Evaluation Process

Nominations were invited from 15 October to 15 November 2025 through an online form, with a mandatory processing fee for each submission. Eligibility required was a minimum of three years of experience or institutional track record in the relevant field.

All submissions underwent a two-stage evaluation:

- Screening by the Secretariat for eligibility and documentation.
- Assessment by an independent expert jury based on originality, impact, scalability, sustainability, and relevance to the category.

Each applicant was allowed only one nomination, and the decision of the evaluation panel remained final.

The Outcome

From the numerous entries received nationwide, 31 nominations qualified for evaluation across eligible categories. After detailed review:

- No award was conferred in the Women’s Health Awareness category due to the absence of suitable nominations.
- A total of 31 awards were presented:
 - 27 awards to individuals

This distribution reflects the strength of contributions in science popularization, science tourism, and public health communication.
